Missionaries in China

The following is a translation of a memorandum inclosed in a note from the Ministers of the Chinese Board of Foreign Affairs at Pekin to the Swedish

"Some time ago, for mutual advantage, so that neither party might be harmed, treaties were signed between China and foreign nations, to be handed down to posterity. However, in subsequent years, reumstances have arisen which not only prevent their being permanent, but which render them use ess, even now, in certain cases. As regards trade, marrelling, but as regards missions, there is a great cellener for your co-sideration."

"Although the object of the missionaries from the first has been to teach the people what is right, yet, from the defective mode of procedure, the Roman Catholic religion (Tim chi chiae,) has met with dis like from the common people, and it is therefore seary to decide at once upon some plan to put a
